

*The Sedona Conference Primer on Managing
Electronic Discovery in Small Cases,
Public Comment Version
(January 2022)*

“Small” cases—those matters involving smaller volumes or less complex varieties of electronically stored information (ESI), or in which the smaller stakes limit the time and money than can and should be spent on electronic discovery—are as varied as they are voluminous. Unlike larger cases where the financial or public policy stakes are higher, the cost and burden of employing the latest and greatest ESI preservation and production practices may not be necessarily proportional to the needs of a small case or consistent with meeting the mandate of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 1: The just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action and proceeding.

The Sedona Conference Primer on Managing Electronic Discovery in Small Cases offers best practices and practical guidance tailored to the particularities of these “smaller” cases. In the interest of the underlying concept of proportionality—tailoring eDiscovery efforts to fit the circumstances of the case and the resources at hand—some of the guidance provided may diverge from what The Sedona Conference recommends for large, more complex cases. But just as in larger cases, the Primer acknowledges and reinforces the guiding principles of proportionality, cooperating, and communication in efficiently and cost-effectively managing discovery. The Primer also includes an appendix that identifies some low-cost or no-cost tools and technologies that can help meet the needs of small cases when on a tight budget.
